INTRODUCTION — Cancer of unknown primary site (CUP) is a relatively common clinical entity, accounting for 4 to 5 percent of all invasive cancers [1]. Within this category, tumors from many primary sites with varying biology are represented. This heterogeneity has made the design and interpretation of clinical studies difficult.

Patients with CUPs typically present with symptoms referable to metastases. The initial work-up, including physical examination, laboratory studies, and imaging procedures, often fails to identify the primary site.

Patient Education

UpToDate offers two levels of content for patients:

- The Basics are short overviews. They are written in accordance with plain language principles and answer the four or five most important questions a person might have about a medical problem.
- Beyond the Basics are longer, more detailed reviews. They are best for readers who want detailed information and are comfortable with some medical terminology.

INTRODUCTION — This section highlights selected specific new recommendations and/or updates that we anticipate may change usual clinical practice. Practice Changing UpDates focus on changes that may have significant and broad impact on practice, and therefore do not represent all updates that affect practice. These Practice Changing UpDates, reflecting important changes to UpToDate over the past year, are presented chronologically, and are discussed in greater detail in the identified topic reviews.

ONCOLOGY (July 2018)

Adjuvant FOLFIRINOX after primary resection for pancreatic cancer

- For patients who undergo initial resection of a pancreatic cancer without neoadjuvant therapy who have an excellent performance status and are able to tolerate associated toxicities, we suggest modified FOLFIRINOX (oxaliplatin plus irinotecan with leucovorin and short-term infusional fluorouracil) rather than gemcitabine alone (Grade 2B). We also prefer this regimen over gemcitabine plus capecitabine.
